A quick guide to the main beer styles;

Stouts:

They were traditionally the generic term for the strongest porters, typically 7% or 8%, produced by a brewery. Guinness being the worlds best selling dry stout.

Lager:

Fermented and conditioned at low temperatures. A process known as 'bottom fermenting' results in a full bodied, mellow beer that is crisp & refreshing with less fruit flavours than an ale.

Ale:

This style of beer production has existed for 1000's of years. Fermented at temperatures between 21-70°C.

Blonde Ale:

Fermented and aged at ale temperatures. Fresh and crisp with medium light bitterness and some sweet malty nuances.
